Weekly

I hope everyone is having a fantastic week! This week we will be learning about a famous historical American, Martin Luther King Jr. We will watch his "I Have a Dream" speech and discuss its importance and what it has done for us in the society today. We are also beginning addition in math this week, so I will be sending some homework home that has to do with addition.

I will be sending homework home every week in their Tuesday Folder. If they bring it back by Friday completed they can move their clip straight to blue! We are really starting reading with a bang! Something that will really help your child is working on sight words at home! They love the game that we call "What is missing?" You just write the word down and take one letter away from that word and ask them what is missing from that certain word. For example: you are working on the word look, and you don't have the k, and you ask them what is missing from the word look! Thank you for everything that you do at home with your child. I can really tell that you work hard and that helps a lot. I love every single one of them and I can't wait to see how much they grow within this six weeks!
